Photoshop offers many different ways to alter digital images, including: Artistic techniques, such as painting and drawing Utilizing effects, such as blur, blur and sharpen, and brightness/contrast adjustment, among others Adobe Photoshop is a powerful image manipulation program and is usually used for professional projects. However, Photoshop is not only for professional digital artists. Many photographers use the program to enhance their work and make use of its features. This article is a collection of tutorial videos that teach Photoshop step-by-step. These YouTube videos provide lesson plans that cover basic topics like: Creating new layers Changing image properties Changing colors Using the brush tool Shopping for the right font Setting up the Screen Color Options Making web images The Photoshop tutorials, which are either from Photoshop artist Chris Orwig or Photoshop guru Richard Rosenbloom, use examples and animations of real photographs, which makes learning Photoshop much more realistic. Most of these videos, although only a few hours long, will go through a maximum of about six steps. This is helpful for beginners because it ensures that at least one step per tutorial is completed. These steps include tutorials for about six different Photoshop features. Although some of the videos were not captured in our country (for example, Richard Rosenbloom uses a U.K. accent), they were captured from the United States and are very reliable. This article features a few of our favorite Photoshop tutorials for beginners. Chris Orwig Photoshop Tutorials - Learn Photoshop from the expert Chris Orwig has an impressive track record in Photoshop. He's been teaching other Photoshop users for some time. His Photoshop tutorials are split into three main sections: * Learn Photoshop from Chris Orwig is a comprehensive set of Photoshop lessons for beginners with 51 instructional videos. Pages Sunday, June 25, 2011 Elated I have been frustrated, consumed with anger, and depressed over this country's unjust system of law. Over the past few days I have been contemplating a related topic, and I came across this quote that I simply cannot let pass: "It is the children of the nation who suffer by laws that are formed and administered by men." -Edmund Burke, Irish statesman and political thinker (1729 - 1797) Children? Are you kidding me? As a parent, I can say that the best way for children to learn how to deal with injustice is for them to witness it directly. If their parents conceal the injustice, children do not learn how to recognize injustice when they see it. This means that parents have a moral responsibility to be honest and up front about the injustices in this world, and they need to teach their children to be thoughtful and critical about these subjects. It also means that we as a country should be honest about our own part in the problem, and a person should be able to understand all of his or her reasons for being unhappy. Today is the thirtieth anniversary of President Reagan signing the Garn-St. Germaine Act into law. The Garn-St. Germaine Act provided for the right of a child to receive separate maintenance. This law was the first time in this country that a judge was able to give a child the right to be supported by his or her parents at the age of 12, or 13, or 14, or whatever age the child reached. Until then, a child was not allowed to receive any support from their parents. That is why divorce and the custody issues for children with divorced parents are a real issue. This is why there are still so many children who have to live in poverty. This is why many children do not receive a college education, because their parents, or even a court, does not allow them to be supported. It is time for a fair and equitable system for the support and custody of children in this country. For too long the courts have put the interests of grownups ahead of those of children. This is one of the reasons that I am so upset about the current debate in this country about the right of women to have an abortion. In other words, the right of a grown-up to decide their own body is more important than the right of a child to have a healthy life and a

The present invention relates to a metal surgical instrument. The invention is more particularly concerned with the structure and use of metal surgical instruments for cutting, scraping and coagulating body tissue, including dental applications. There is a need for a surgical instrument which can be used in the extraction of a tooth, and which is capable of cutting through the hard tissue of the tooth, as well as through the soft tissue surrounding the tooth. The instrument should have a handle, a cutting element at the end of the handle, and a tines for scraping against the surface of the tooth. The instrument should also have a mode of operation in which it is used as a backscatter, so that tissue material scraped from the tooth may be cleaned of tissue debris before the scraped tissue is delivered to the site where it will be healed. There is also the possibility that the tooth has itself been diseased or infected, so that the material of the tooth may contain microbial pathogens which must be cleaned from the cutting tool before the tissue can be safely removed from the tooth. It is necessary also to scrape the surface of the tooth to remove tartar, and to clean the interproximal area to remove deposits of plaque. There are a number of instruments available for this purpose. A common dental instrument of the prior art is the drill, which has a rotating cutting portion at one end, and a handle at the other. The cutting is carried out by contact with an abrasive, such as silicon carbide or tungsten carbide. Attempts have been made to apply one of several of the properties of diamond to the production of a surgical blade. There have been a number of attempts to form cutting edge in a surgical blade from diamond. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 1,591,595 of Lemen teaches that diamond can be formed by a pressing process, but the disclosed blades are of a thickness no greater than 0.06 inches and are consequently too brittle to withstand a cutting operation. U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,324,443 and 5,098,314 describe surgical blades made of bonded diamond. These blades are made from layers of diamond bonded to each other by metal and used for cutting the keratin of a tooth to remove a root canal. The bonded diamond blades are individually formed, and are thick enough to withstand cutting. It is an object of the present invention to provide a surgical instrument having an enlarged head for drilling and sawing in the jaw bone.
