Similar to the SketchUp program, AutoCAD offers construction-related tasks such as 2D drafting and modeling. Construction-related features are integrated into the program's functions and interface. Existing Autodesk 3D modeling software can be used to build objects such as houses, cars and furniture. Once a 3D model is completed, it can be viewed and printed, and then exported into formats such as.dwg and.dxf. Autodesk began the development of AutoCAD in 1980. In the beginning, its user interface was very different from the other apps at the time. However, the user interface evolved to become more similar to SketchUp, another piece of AutoCAD software. AutoCAD was originally released for the Intel 8088, 80186 and 80286 microcomputers. The user interface was initially included with the application, but was eventually moved to an optional feature. The first version of AutoCAD was not well-received because it was relatively expensive. According to a representative from Autodesk, "the developers anticipated that many users would start to use the software but not finish. The developers were surprised to find that nearly everyone purchased it and used it for months." A number of companies joined Autodesk in 1982 to develop the Autodesk AutoCAD Series. At the time of the company's acquisition in 1999, the software program was used by more than 2.5 million users in the United States alone. It was among the top 10 most-popular software programs in the United States and Canada in 2013. Autodesk has also released a number of AutoCAD plugins that can be integrated into other 3D modeling software programs, such as Revit, Maya, SketchUp and Magna3D. Users who purchase the software can only work on one project at a time with their chosen edition, unless they activate it by using a license key. In addition, both editions of the program contain the same features and user interface. There are exceptions to the licenses, however. AutoCAD is available for free from the Autodesk website under the Open Source Initiative's Free and Open Source Software license. A user can download the free AutoCAD version, but the software must be run on an

John Dowdy, in a still from a 2004 EPA video, has declared himself a "socialist". Photo: EPA More than $300,000 in donations made to the New South Wales electoral campaign of Australian Greens MP Scott Ludlam in the 2012 election campaign will have to be returned, after the Electoral Commission of NSW declared Mr Ludlam's campaign to be a "political party". New South Wales Premier Barry O'Farrell said he welcomed the decision. "The people of New South Wales, and indeed the people of Australia, have a right to expect that candidates and parties they support will abide by the same ethical standards as everyone else. Mr Ludlam's campaign appears to be no different in this respect and will have to return the money it has received," he said. Their policies are to abolish our mining industry, to decriminalise same-sex marriage and to impose a carbon tax." The Electoral Commission of NSW ruled the Greens campaign was effectively a "political party" and required the party to register with the NSW Electoral Commission. Party registration also applies to those who make more than $300 and raise more than $15,000, and those who have paid someone else to raise funds. The WA Greens have received the largest contributions, after having been advised by their own legal team that there was no requirement to register as a "political party". The NSW Electoral Commission has been given 90 days to declare Mr

Ludlam's campaign a "political party", and either require the money be returned, or be declared as having been used for political purposes. The Campaign ca3bfb1094
