Making selections An important tool for cropping or retouching an image is the _selection_ tool. Selecting is a way of telling Photoshop what to do with the image. A selection is a bounding box drawn around the part of the image that you want to keep.

Selections and options are discussed in more detail later in the chapter in the section titled, "Selecting and moving objects." Clicking and dragging to select an area is the fastest way to use the selection tool and usually works best. Some people prefer to use the keyboard shortcuts first, though. The keyboard shortcuts are discussed in the section "Disabling the keyboard shortcuts."

When you want to add, subtract, or move elements within an image, you select them first, and then you make the changes.

Another way to select objects is to use the lasso tool or the magic wand tool. These tools allow you to simply draw around the parts of an object, and Photoshop automatically selects them, as long as you have no other objects selected in the same or different layer. You can also go directly to these tools from the Channels panel, covered later in the chapter, by pressing Alt+RMB. ## Choosing a preset Although you have plenty of image editing tools at your disposal, some preset tools come built into Photoshop and help speed up the process of retouching images. You can choose from a variety of tools, including the Lasso tool, pen tool, clone stamp tool, and the Quick Selection tool. Keep in mind that if you already have a layer active, the tool in the Layers panel becomes inactive. You can always return to it by activating it again from the panel (Tools panel), or by clicking on it (the tool icon to the left of the word Layers). * * * # Lasso tool The lasso tool is a tool designed to select a specific region of an image.

Q: Missing Localizability.strings file for my iPhone app I'm having some troubles with an iPhone app I'm making. I was using a strings file for localizing the app (using the iOS6 API). I have for example: "bla" = "voolle"; and I replace "voolle" by "vrolle". The simulator works like a charm, but when I run the app on my device I receive the following error message: The following code has no localized versions: "bla", "bla1" So I do what is suggested in the error message: I create a Localizable.strings file with my "voolle" and "bla1" keys: "vrolle" = "voolle"; "bla1" = "voolle"; Now I run the app on my iPhone and all is well. But... where is the Localizable.strings file? I had this file on past versions of the app, and deleted it since. It's not in the xcode project folder, and the Build Settings says my app doesn't have localization support. I've read the following: Make sure your Info.plist file includes: "Localizations - English" "Localizations - French" And then: I delete the localizable.strings file and recreate it as an empty file. I run: InfoPlistPacker build And it's still empty. So I tried to run the app, and it said the same thing, that the app has no localization support. What is wrong? A: Turns out all I had to do was to move the code that generates the localization file from the controller's viewDidLoad to viewWillAppear. It must be loaded the first time the view is appearing, else it will not have localized. Not sure how I missed the red line on viewWillAppear in xcode since I would have just run the app on the phone in the simulator and it would have called viewDidLoad. What's New in the?

The prevalence of a low hematocrit and elevated platelet count in patients with unstable angina. The purpose of this study was to identify a distinct subset of patients with unstable angina (UA) who have (1) low hematocrit and elevated platelet count and (2) increased risk for ischemic events. In a prospective study, 43 consecutive patients with UA were identified at the time of angiographic diagnosis. Coronary angiographic features were analyzed in four discrete groups: patients with a normal hematocrit ($400,000 \times 10^9/L$), both low hematocrit and elevated platelet count, and neither abnormality. In the 43 patients, 36 (84%) had one or more coronary risk factors other than UA. Compared with normal hematocrit or elevated platelet count patients, low hematocrit and elevated platelet count patients were younger, tended to be male, and had higher blood pressure, lower creatinine and white blood cell counts, and longer hospital stays. Compared with normal hematocrit or elevated platelet count patients, there was a significantly higher incidence of left main coronary artery disease, poorer scores on the Canadian Cardiovascular Research Group Angina Questionnaire, increased abnormal electrocardiographic findings, and more frequently positive findings by cardiac catheterization for elevated cholesterol (91%, 44%, 67%, and 79%, respectively), positive cardiac markers (48%, 17%, 36%, and 50%, respectively), low ejection fraction (18%, 9%, 7%, and 38%, respectively), and severe hypoperfusion (45%, 39%, 38%, and 52%, respectively). During a mean follow-up period of 17 ± 8 months, there were two cardiac deaths and five nonfatal myocardial infarctions in normal hematocrit or elevated platelet count patients, three cardiac deaths and four nonfatal myocardial infarctions in patients with low hematocrit and elevated platelet count, and three cardiac deaths and one nonfatal myocardial infarction in patients with neither abnormality ($p = 0.002$ for low hematocrit and elevated platelet count compared with normal hematocrit or elevated platelet count). These data demonstrate that low hematocrit and elevated platelet count are frequent features of UA, and represent a distinct subset with worse clinical and angiographic findings and higher in-hospital risk for ischemic events.
