So what this suggests is that racism in the current system is not about inferior cultural traits but about marginalisation, exclusion and failure to integrate. It is about doing two things: making people feel different and hearing the story of how they relate to those differences. It is about control. It is not surprising that political parties are at their most racist when they are managing to do things they do not want to be seen to do. The racism that has been revealed in the Welfare Reform Act is not about insults to people's culture, but about exclusion, marginalisation and rejection. It is about a system that is holding people back, when it needs to be lifting them up. Lucy Bland is a Lecturer in Sociology at UEA. physiologically relevant concentrations of osmolytes by Ehrlich-Chevillard staining. Histochemical staining techniques have been widely used for the characterization of cells and tissues.

This technique is based on the principle of the differential solubility of lysosomal and cytosolic proteins, which are known as L-proteins, and cytosolic proteins. In the case of resistance to osmolytes, typically obtained by anosmotic conditions, one can identify the cells as "resistant" or "sensitive", "tolerant" or "poisoned", "compensated" or "uncompensated", "adapted" or "non-adapted". However, the mechanisms by which cells counteract the osmolyte accumulation in the cytosol have been only partially understood. In the present study, we used the L-proteins staining to analyze the behavior of Ehrlich-

---

Chevillard (EC) staining during the adaptation to various concentrations of sorbitol, mannitol and taurine. The obtained results suggest the existence of a specific staining pattern of the cellular organelles, mainly containing EC/L-proteins. By comparing the staining of cellular organelles with cellular organelles in the cytosol/mitochondrial fraction and total cell fraction, we suggest that the differences in EC staining are related to the organelles, which underwent cytosol accumulation of sorbitol or mannitol, and not the cytosol itself. The possible causes for
