Thanks for reading!Q: Java application not closing as expected when embedded in application I am a very new Java developer. I am building a desktop Java application. I was just looking to build some GUI stuff. I don't know a lot about Java, but I am fairly competent with C and C++. I have built some pretty significant systems in C. I have also used pythons and other scripting languages. I was just looking for something simple, and decided to use Java. I also thought of using Java because of it's portability. I am using eclipse, and building a jar file. I think I did all that correctly, however, my issue is this. I launch the application, click "Run", I get the main method running, then the window pops up, and then it doesn't close. I get no errors. It is just stuck. I have checked for memory leaks. I have used many other solutions to close windows, and I haven't tried anything like what I'm doing now. I don't want to have to go through several methods to get this working. Is there a way to close the window that is built into the jar? I cannot

What's new:

Overview The Zombie Army Four Pack includes the Secret Service Special - the.45 ACP version of the Wehrmacht P08 - as well as two additional accessories: the Fixed Stock 90 Round Pistol Magazine - the perfect complement to the Secret Service Special - and the Trenchcloak Microlight suppressor. Invisible, light and secure - the secret weapon of the couriers During World War I and II the Wehrmacht developed concealed and high-risk weapons systems because sneaking up and ambushing enemy soldiers from the shadows was exactly what they did every day. Their go-to weapons of choice were submachine guns. Some were overly complicated and would be too cumbersome for modern use. Others were too cumbersome for modern use. So were left to soldier only their lighter duties and to witness the great change in warfare wrought by the introduction of the machine gun. The KG Voss MG08, which was designed during World War II, is almost as rare now as German submachine guns of that era. In WWII it was used by many special units of the Luftwaffe, to harass Allied supply centers while the 8th Air Force flew missions against the Wehrmacht. One WWII squad nicknamed itself the Flieger Männer (The Flying Men). And why not? The MG08 was designed specifically for the Wehrmacht to be easily concealable - by airmen - and to be useful in combat when engaged by troops. Both lightweight and compact, the MG08 was among the best submachine guns of its era. This particular variant includes a built-in sight base and a double trigger mechanism, which produces a shorter pull on the first trigger. And finally - it has the optional Picatinny Rail which means it can be fitted to a precision rifle. When it comes to crossing the Great Frontier - be prepared. The Team SIG P08 is as good a defensive pistol as one could hope for. It will offer protection from both ground and airborne assaults and may become your secret weapon of choice in upcoming conflicts. The.45 ACP version of the 9mm SIG P08 has a similar long history as the much better known 9mm SIG P226, and is the exact model of the weapon that Eric Erickson carried when he evaded capture in Iraq. The P08 pistol is still easily concealable as it is now, but in large sizes, and the general folding and telescoping structure offers a natural length when open.
