Jazz drummer John Abercrombie, acclaimed for his varied and moody drumming style, has died at age 87. He left behind a huge body of recordings with a variety of bands and collaborators over several decades, including Miles Davis, Steve Lacy, Weather Report, Weather Report II, Jean-Luc Ponty, Elvin Jones, Jean-Philippe Nouchon, Jimmy Giuffre, Charlie Haden, and the late Dave Holland. He appeared on a long list of other recordings with Dave Brubeck, Chris Brubeck, Gary Burton, and Don Thompson. Abercrombie's work frequently incorporated forms of free jazz. He was one of the first jazz drummers to combine aspects of rock and jazz styles of drumming and was greatly influenced by the rhythms of rock and jazz drummers like Gene Krupa. Born in New York City in May 1930, Abercrombie was the son of a famous composer and he spent his early years playing the drums. His drumming style

Sen. Greg Albritton (R-Range) on Wednesday introduced his bill which would declare that if a government agency requests public records from a person, then that person is not required to respond unless he or she claims an exemption. The bill, along with another bill from Sen. Bill Holtzclaw (R-Madison), would make exceptions to that rule if the government agency tries to suppress materials or makes a "frivolous" request. The creation of a commission to review public records is also in Albritton's bill. "One of the most basic tenets of a free society is the right of the people to inspect the conduct of their government. When government officials conduct themselves properly, citizens are bound to pursue the rights of openness," Albritton said in a press release. "However, when government officials operate outside of the boundaries of the law, it is the citizen's duty to check them." Albritton said the bill is "not just about public records, but about the future of public discourse and the protection of personal and governmental liberty." "The
